4. The City of Conway was recently contacted by a former professor from Coastal Carolina University. Her home was flooded during Hurricane Florence, and that prompted her interest in researching our city and how we communicate with our residents. The professor has offered to research and poll our residents on their perceived threats following a natural disaster and how we can best work as a municipality to assist our residents before, during, and after any natural disaster – such as Hurricane Florence. You can learn more details about the research and how to contact the researcher here.

5. Staff members with the City of Conway have been hard at work in Riverfront Park the last few weeks to spruce up the landscaping before Spring! You can see photos of that work

6. The City of Conway has installed a high water marker for Hurricane Florence. It shows just how high the water got on Laurel Street when the Waccamaw River crested on September 26, 2018. Hurricane Florence has been called the worst natural disaster the City of Conway has seen to date with devastating flooding that impacted much of the area. You can see the marker here.
